Assessment

This course will assist you to understand the organisational context in which social workers practice as well as how a social worker can be an %bccb`qfsb lod^kfp^qflk^i lmbo^qlo% - a person who works within organisations as well as works strategically for social justice and human rights. You are likely to work in a range of organisations during your career. These organisations could vary from large to small government agencies (e.g. Commonwealth, State or Local governments), as well as community-based agencies or large multifaceted NGOs. Some agencies will primarily focus on service delivery, while others will work in advocacy, policy and development. These agencies have a range of structures, cultures and management approaches. This course uses critical analysis and reflection as a stimulus for learning about professional practice in organisations.

Each of the two assessments has a strong practice focus and are structured to prepare you for
