

We talked to their families and carers.

We talked to people who work at the Hubs or use the Hubs.

We talked to people in government about the Hubs.

What the Hubs do well for people and their families

The Hubs help participants to feel happier and healthier.

The Hubs help participants get other support services more easily.

The Hubs help participants with better medication and behaviour support.

The Hubs help make NDIS support better.

What the Hubs do well for service providers

The Hubs help service providers give better support to people with intellectual disability and mental health problems.

Service providers are organisations or workers that support people.

The Hubs give training and information to service providers.

The Hubs help service providers to work together more.

The Hubs help service providers to work well with people with intellectual disability.

What could be better

These are things Hubs could do better.

Hub participants could take part in talks that are about them more.

People with intellectual disability and mental health problems could help with training service providers.

The NSW Government could help all the services work better together in New South Wales.

These services could be

- The Hubs
- NDIS

The Hubs could work with places in NSW that do not have many services.

What we will do next

We will talk to people again.

We want to find out if things have changed since the first time we talked to them.

We will get other information about the Hubs.

We will look at information about people who use the Hubs

We will look at information about services that use the Hubs

More information

More information about the evaluation is on the SPRC website.

You can click here to find out more.

